THE DAILY PRESS.

HONGKONG, NOVEMBER 24th, 1890.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT made through the medium of the Agency House, and telegraphed out by Reuter, should have a reassuring effect generally. It will be remembered that Mr. Buzurg, when about to start for China, left Marseilles, to carry on the negotiations with the Peking Authorities, was suddenly detained and fresh negotiations, opened with the Marquis Tseho in St. Petersburg. The Chinese Representative was, it would seem, given very distinctly to understand that the Russian Government would not accept any agreement that had not first been approved by the Chinese Emperor. The Russians have been sold once, but they will not risk a repetition of the Treaty of Livadia episode. Nor can they be blamed for refusing to be played with. It is rather surprising that they have shown so much patience with Chinese fecklessness and procrastination. On the other hand, never to have consented to the terms of the Treaty of Livadia, but, having done so, his Government were really bound by the act of their Ambassador, and had no right to repudiate the agreement. It was very futile, moreover, to kick against the terms of the treaty, if in the end the Chinese Government mean to accept conditions equally onerous and galling and pay a large indemnity for the delay and expense occasioned by their restiveness. We may be sure that, if the negotiations are progressing favourably from a Russian point of view, the Chinese are conceding all that has been demanded. It is possible that Russia has abstained from making too hard a bargain, as a matter of policy, but she is pretty certain to get her pound of flesh. A war with Russia, however, could not fail to be disastrous to China, and the latter is wise in trying to make the best she can of a bad job, and avert the consequences which an outbreak of mandarin vanity and brag had brought so perilously nigh.

The Hainanese are obviously far from well disposed to foreigners, as the treatment recently experienced at their hands by the crews of the James Batley and Tyffette sufficiently prove. Mr. A. LAY, the Assistant in Charge of the Customs at Hoihow, in his report on the trade of that port for the year 1879, notes this feeling of hostility on the part of the natives, to foreigners and shows how it acts as a bar to their becoming acquainted with the interior of the island. He says:—"One great difficulty experienced when endeavouring to find out any particulars about the trade of this island is that the officials are very much averse to allowing foreigners to go any distance inland for fear of their being molested by the inhabitants of the villages through which they might pass. Although the people in the neighbourhood are exceptionally friendly towards foreigners, the fear, on the part of the mandarins, that the natives farther inland might be rude to strangers is, I think, a natural one, and we must be satisfied with second-hand information, and wait some long time before we can explore the island and ascertain its resources." It is a pity that the hostility of the natives should prevent the exploration of Hainan. Mr. LAY believes implicitly in the good faith of the mandarins, but we are not quite so confident of it. Over and over again it has been proved that the ill-will displayed by natives in China has been solely due to the instigation of the officials and literati. The disorderly character of the populace is a favourite plea with Chinese officials when they wish to place obstacles in the way of the foreign explorer. Moreover, if so disposed, they can in almost every instance secure the good treatment of strangers in advance, and there is no reason why the Hainanese mandarins should not exercise the authority they undoubtedly possess in this direction.
